Following My Conscience?

Q. In recent months much publicity has been given to the Church's condemnation of using artificial contraceptives. Recently in a women's club meeting in our parish, one of our members stated quite positively an opinion to which I could think of no response. She, who faithfully attends Mass, said this: "I know the Church condemns using artificial contraception, but my conscience tells me it's not wrong. I follow my conscience in this matter because the Church tells us we have to follow our consciences." What could, or should, I have said to her?

A. First of all, your friend misunderstands the nature of conscience. Conscience is an acquired capacity or ability for making moral judgments. It is a judging faculty by which we decide whether a given action is right or wrong. Conscience is not subjective. It must have a standard by which to make its judgments. Conscience cannot determine what the standard is. Your friend's conscience can say nothing about any standard of morality.

Evidently, the lady in question does not realize that the conflict is not between the Church's teaching and what her conscience tells her. These two cannot conflict, because they operate on totally different planes. She has chosen by her will—not by her conscience—to believe using artificial contraception is morally acceptable. That chosen believe—not her conscience—is in conflict with the Church's teaching. She has set her desire to legitimate and/or use artificial contraception against the Church's teaching. She has chosen a belief to be the standard by which her conscience must operate. And, of course, she will get the answer she wants.

Moreover, not only does the Church tell us we must follow our consciences, but with equal force, and perhaps even more basically, she tells us we must correctly form our consciences—that is, we must accept the truth by which our consciences are to be guided. Holy Mother church is our teacher in matters of faith and morals. In the instance under discussion, your friend has denied the Church's authority and substituted her own.

Finally, your friend needs to be told this. The Church's condemnation of using artificial contraception is infallibly taught by the Church's ordinary magisterium. In 1998, the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith issued an addendum to Blessed John Paul II's apostolic letter Ad Tuendam Fidem. The congregation warned that anyone who denies any of the church's official teachings "would therefore no longer be in full communion with the Catholic Church."
